Welcome Ms. Lindo-Rice!

We are thrilled to welcome Ms. Lindo-Rice as our new Assistant Principal! Ms. Lindo-Rice is proud to be in her 20th year as an educator. She began her teaching career in New York City where she taught for seven years before migrating to Florida. Her next twelve years were spent teaching vision students, ESE students, inclusion in K-12 classrooms, and ultimately as an ESE Reading Specialist for Charlotte County. She served in that district level position until her recent appointment. Ms. Lindo-Rice has a wide range of teaching experience – from infants (Visiting Nurse Services, NY) to adults (LaGuardia Community College) and everything in between.

Besides reading, Ms. Lindo-Rice has a passion for professional development. She holds multiple certifications as well as her Reading and ESOL endorsements. She has also created and facilitated various professional development courses for teachers and support staff in Charlotte County.

Ms. Rice is also an award-winning Christian fiction author. Her ninth novel will be released this November. Other hobbies include singing and reading. However, her most challenging and rewarding role is being a mother to her two sons in high school. Classroom News: SWF Juvenile Detention Center

The students in the Southwest Florida Juvenile Detention Center's technology class, led by Ms. Carson, learn various business and computer applications while exploring academic subjects such as geography, cultural diversity, history, health and science. Ms. Carson, a business and technology teacher with nineteen years' experience, strives to make learning enjoyable and relevant for her students. A favorite among her students is the incorporation of Kahoot, an online learning game creation application, which brings lessons to life through the use of color, statistics, interactive response and discussion. Kahoot is used to introduce new concepts and to preview and review content.

Through Kahoot,
Questions are displayed on the classroom screen for all to see. Students then submit their answer to each question using their classroom computer. Each question culminates with class results displayed on the classroom screen, prompting class discussions which serve to deepen student understanding of important concepts. Kahoot is also available for personal use at www.getkahoot.com.

Reading Coach's Corner! By Anne Berchtold, Reading Coach

A question parents often ask is why we teach writing in a reading class. It's a really good question. Reading is thinking, guided by print. When someone is getting ready to write, they often spend a few minutes thinking about what they want to say. The next thing they do is write those thoughts.

So it is with our students in Juvenile Justice Education Centers. When they need to communicate with the judge, their JPO, or even in a review situation, it is important for them to be able to express their thoughts in writing.

Last week at Price, we challenged our students to critically examine an article they had just read. We wanted them to identify the claims the author made and find where the evidence was for those claims. Once they had their notes, the students used them to write a brief response to the article. It made the students more aware of claims made by authors and helped them to understand how to put their reactions into writing.

Most of our students can read, but taking the next step and putting their thoughts into writing can be a challenge. So we dedicate some time during reading (and most other content areas) to writing.

Discipline & Guidance - Teen Behavior

When Typical Teen Behavior Becomes Troubled Teen Behavior
Typical Teen Behavior	Warning Signs of a Troubled Teen
Changing appearance. Keeping up with fashion is important to teens. That may mean wearing provocative or attention seeking clothing or dyeing hair. Unless your teen wants tattoos, avoid criticizing and save your protests for the bigger issues. Fashions change, and so will your teen.	Changing appearance can be a red flag if it's accompanied by problems at school or other negative changes in behavior, or if there's evidence of cutting and self-harm or extreme weight loss or weight gain.
Increased arguments and rebellious behavior. As teens begin seeking independence, you will frequently butt heads and argue.	Constant escalation of arguments, violence at home, skipping school, getting in fights, and run-ins with the law are all red flag behaviors that go beyond the norm of teenage rebellion.
Mood swings. Hormones and developmental changes often mean that your teen will experience mood swings, irritable behavior, and struggle to manage his/her emotions.	Rapid changes in personality, falling grades, persistent sadness, anxiety, or sleep problems could indicate depression, bullying, or another emotional health issue. Take any talk about suicide seriously.
Experimenting with alcohol or drugs. Most teens will try alcohol and smoke a cigarette at some point. Many will even try marijuana. Talking to your kids frankly and openly about drugs and alcohol is one way to ensure it doesn't progress further.	When alcohol or drug use becomes habitual, especially when it's accompanied by problems at school or home, it may indicate a substance abuse issue or other underlying problems.
More influenced by friends than parents. Friends become extremely important to teens and can have a great influence on their choices. As teens focus more on their peers, that inevitably means they withdraw from you. It may leave you feeling hurt, but it doesn't mean your teen doesn't still need your love.	Red flags include a sudden change in peer group (especially if the new friends encourage negative behavior), refusing to comply with reasonable rules and boundaries, or avoiding the consequences of bad behavior by lying. Your teen spending too much time alone can also indicate problems.
